TO AID TURKS, GREEKS

Bruce Catton Says:

Bankhead: Bath "Actor," String Saver, Gardener.

WASHINGTON — On duty in his lofty rostrum, Speaker of the House William B. Bankhead is stern, efficient. Off duty, he is "just folks"—a man who likes to put on overalls and putter around in the garden, a collector of odd items ranging from gavels to pieces of string, a devoted reader of detective stories and a solver of crossword puzzles.

The attic of his home in Jasper, Ala., is a sort of museum. There are ranged all sorts of mementos—dozens of gavels which have been presented to him walking sticks that he has acquired, and lucky pieces of all kinds.

For the Speaker is a mite superstitious. One Easter Sunday on the way to church he ordered his car stopped so that he could pick up a rabbit's foot he saw by the road. He considered the day especially lucky because on his return from church, he found a buckeye on the sidewalk. One time, walking with Mrs. Bankhead, he saw a playing card lying face-down by the curb.

"If it's diamond, it's lucky," he said, ing it up. It was a diamond, and the seven to boot.

Hangs on to Old Suits

Mr. Bankhead hates to buy new clothes and hates to give up his old ones. At one time the Bankhead home in Jasper was fairly overflowing with old clothing which he refused to part with.

Mrs. Bankhead solved the problem when a tramp visited the house during the Speaker's absence and asked for a handout. To the tramp's amazed delight, she outfitted him completely from head to toe with Mr. Bankhead's old suits, sweaters, hats and overcoats. Then, to ensure a safe getaway, she drove him down the road in her car and got him out of sight before the Speaker should return.

Mr. Bankhead makes himself personally responsible for his collection of string. When a package is delivered at his home he takes charge of the string, and will contentedly spend an entire evening unravelling the complicated and haphazard knots in it. He usually reads himself to sleep with a detective story, and right now is putting in hours trying to win a popular crossword puzzle contest.

He would have been an actor if his father had not objected. The theatrical success attained by his famous daughter, Tallulah, is the pride of his heart. His own theatrical ambitions find their outlet when he takes his morning shower; instead of singing tunelessly, like most males, he recites Shakespeare.

In Washington, the Bankhead occupy a hotel apartment, so his passions for gardening is confined to his his Alabama home. There, disreputably dressed, he spends hours in his garden—and woe to any member of the household who borrows and fails to replace any of his innumerable garden tools.

Puts String to Work

In his back yard he has a little house for the redbirds to nest in, and he raises sunflowers to provide seeds for them to eat.

One summer he worried a good deal because the sparrows were muscling in and stealing the seeds. His health was poor that summer and he spent much of his time on a cot under a tree in the yard; and he fixed a string so that he could give the bird house a little jerk whenever a sparrow flew up to get some seeds.

His didn't work so well, so he bought an expessnive sparrow trap, baited it and set it out. It worked fine, and presently a whole flock of sparrows was trapped. Mr. Bankhead picked up the trap and set off to slay the thieving inmates.

But when he actually got down to it, he found he didn't have the heart. So he set all the sparrows loose and threw the trap away.

He loves horses and horse races. Equipped with rabbit's feet buckeys and other lucky charms, he can almost invariably pick a winner. He is also a football enthusiast; used to be a University of Alabama fullback himself, and can't go to a game even now without getting all trembly with excitement.

He is also a confirmed and skilful fisherman. In vacations, he usually goes up to a Canadian island owned by his brother and fishes.

In Washington, he and Mrs. Bankhead live very quietly. He hates to put on tails and white tie for formal functions. He also hates having the furniture in his house rearranged, which makes it rather tough because Mrs. Bankhead is a confirmed furniture-shifter.

The Speaker's one vice is smoking too many cigarets. The habit worries him a little, and he frequently resolves to cut down on it. But the resolution never lasts more than a day or so. Mrs. Bankhead remarks that "he takes it out in talking, mostly."

Tax for Jobless Upheld in State Court's Decision

Hot Springs Bathhouses Required to Pay Tax to State

NO BOND DECISION

Court Holds Tax Uncollectible on Income Outside of State

LITTLE ROCK—(AP)—The Arkansas Supreme Court in a far-reaching decision Monday upheld the constitutionality of the state's 1937 unemployment compensation act.

The tribunal's decision was given in an unanimous opinion upholding the state's right to collect unemployment compensation tax from the operators of bathhouses located on the government reservation at Hot Springs.

The opinion affirmed the refusal of Chancellor Frank Dodge of Pulaski county, to grant the Buckstaff bathhouse an injunction preventing State Labor Commissioner Ed McKinley from collecting the levy.

A corporation can not escape taxation merely because it is created by the government, subsidized or employed byit, the decision said, unless it is, in reality, an agency for the exercises of the constitutional powers of the United States.

The court withheld a decision on the constitutionality of Governor Bailey's new bond. refunding plan after a week's deliberation.

In another decision of prime importance the court held to tax income derived by domestic corporations from sources outside the state.

The finding sustained the Pulaski chancellor in granting an injunction to Gregory-Robinson-Speas, Inc., of Rogers, preventing the state commissioner of revenues from collecting tax on the earnings of the company's vinegar manufacturing plants in Alabama and Oklahoma. The company also operates a plant at Rogers and one in Texas.

Prized Poland, Buffeted Through History, Again in Middle of European Tug-of-War

A Free Republic Restores Glory of the 16th Century

Under King Stephen Poland Was Great—the Powers Devoured Her

RUSSIANS, GERMANS

One or the Other Covet Rich Land of 34 Million People

By WILLIS THORNEON
NEA Service Staff Writer

Somebody wanting a chunk of Poland. Somebody cutting himself a slice. The Poles trying to get it back.

A good part of European history for the last thousand years is a series of variations on that theme.

So when Adolf Hitler snarls and gestures menacingly toward the broad northern plain below the Baltic, he is doing no more than the Turks, Swedes, Russians, Prusslans, Austrians, Hungarians and French have done in the past.

If Belgium has been the "cockpit of Europe," Poland has been the slaughter house. Since Prince Ziemovit snatched from the ruins of the Moravian Empire in the 10th century a bit of land between the Carpathians and the Bug river, there has been a Polish land.

War has been almost its chronic fate since that time. Conqueror after conqueror snatched at its lands and its people.

Once Mighty Monarchy

Hitler's weapons are pointed toward these same lands at the moment, while the Poles once more prepare to defend themselves. They never forget that in the 16th century, while America was a pitiful huddle of log-hut settlements clinging to the Atlantic seacost, Poland was a great nation under King Stephen Batory, who took Danzig, pushed back the Russians as far to the northeast as Pskov, and came near to restoring her power down through the Ukraine all the way to the Black Sea.

The first deliberate despoiling of Poland in modern times, however, came just before the Americans began to fight for freedom at Lexington. Using tactics that today have a familiar ring, Russia's minister to Poland, Repnin, fomented internal trouble in the country, backing up a dissatisfied element against the regime. Badly split over religion, Poland was in no position to resist.

So in 1772 Prussia and Russia, first surrounding Poland with troops ready to march, sat down at a table and cut themselves slices of the country, also generously cutting one for Austria. One-fourth of Poland's territory, almost 4000 square miles, and one-fifth of her people, nearly 2,000,000, were parceled out among the conspirators without a shot being fired.

They granted Poland a constitution, however, and progress was made in liberalizing it. But the Empress Catharine of Russia didn't like that, and threatened an invasion. Poland, foreseeing this, had made an alliance with Prussia, but Prussia threw her down at the last moment.

When Russian troops marched in to restore the old reactionary constitution, a small Polish army stood alone to bar its path. Beaten and forced to retire in the east, Poland also had to watch the Prussians march in from the west to make sure that, if there were pickings, Catherine would not get them all.

Carving Act

So in 1793, the year terrorists were executing King Louis in France and while Washington sat in the American presidential chair, Russia carved off the whole eastern section of Poland, a quarter of a million square miles, while Prussia took most of Great Poland, including Danzig. Poland had been reduced to a third of her former size, and had onliy 3,500,000 people left.

Against this degraded condition, Kosciusko, veteran of the American revolution, staged a rebelion. Kosciuszko had a dream of a league of republics against the monarchies, but when the fighting broke out, he was all alone. Beaten by overwhelming masses of Russians, Kosciuszko, wounded in body and spirit, had to watch a third partition of his country.

So greedy were the great powers that they almost fell to war over the spoils, but finally Austria was satisfied with Western Galicia and Southern Masovia, while Prussia took Western Masovia, including Warsaw. Russia took all the rest.

In 1795-6 the name of Poland vanished from the map.

But not from the hearts of Poles,

ITALIAN HITS U. S

Editor Virginio Gayda Warns Us to "Mind Our Own Business"

LONDON, Eng. — (AP) — The British cabinet in an emergency session was reported reliably Monday to have decided to offer a guarantee of independence to Greece and Turkey.

Earlier, Prime Minister Chamberlain was said to have told Italy that any attempt to seize the strategic Greek-owned island of Corfu would be interpreted by Britain as an invitation to war.

The urgent cabinet meeting coincided with emergency movements of British warships in the Mediterranean.

At the same time the cabinet decided to break in on parliament's Easter vacation and to convene both houses in extraordinary session Thursday.

The object was to register the British government's disapproval of the Italian invasion of Albania, and to discuss ways of protecting other nations that are considered threatened.

"Mind Our Own Business"

ROME, Italy—(AP)—Virginio Gayda, replying to criticism in the United States of Italy's seizure of Albania, told Americans Monday to "mind their own business."

Writing in his newspaper, Gayda threatened that Italy and Germany would meddle in American affairs unless the United States let them alone.

He asserted it was time American "threats" and intrigues came to an end.

Albania Conquered

TIRANA, Albania—(AP)—The provisional government of Albania Monday pleaded loyalty of the Albanian people to Premier Mussolini and formally accepted Italian rule in their behalf.

The president and secretary of the administrative committee broadcast loyalty addresses to Albania and Italy, their speeches being relayed over Italian radio stations.

Contrary to expectations in Tirana, Mussolini had not arrived in time for the broadcast, and it was doubted that he would come Monday.

An "appeal" of Albanian leaders to Mussolini to permit them to found an Albanian Fascist party was also read over the radio.

British Protest

LONDON, Eng.—(AP)—Great Britain protested strongly Sunday to Italy against the Fascist seizure of Albania during an Easter Sunday of urgent political, military and diplomatic conferences. In return she received assurances that Italy's occupation of Albania would be of "a limited character."

The British protest was delivered by Foreign Secreary Halifax in three separate interviews with Guido Crolla, Italian charge d'affaires.

There was an atmosphere of crisis as Prime Minister Chamberlain cut short his fishing holiday in Scotland and returned to London to deael with the latest coup in Europe. He ordered a full cabinet session for Monday to deliberate on measures to halt what London feared may be further expansion by the Rome-Berlin axis in southeastern Europe.

Under consideration, it was reported, was a pledge to fight for Greek and Roumanian independence, similar to that extended to Poland, if they should be threatened.

Mussolini to Enter

ROME, Eng.—(AP)—Britain sought further information Sunday on Italy's military occupation of Albania to weigh its effect on the European line-up while it was hinted Premier Mussolini might make a triumphal entry into Tirana. An official announcement said all Italian radio stations would relay a Tirana broadcast Monday at 1:30 p. m. (5:30 a. m. Hope time) "if the weather permits."

This was interpreted to mean that, if weather and Albanian conditions permit, Mussolini would fly to Tirana for a ceremonial announcement that Albania is part of the Italian empire and possibly to offer the crown of Albania to King Vittorio Emanuele.

The Earl of Perth, British ambassador to Italy, called on Foreign Minister Ciano soon after Ciano returned by plane from Tirana where she had gone

Where Justice Might Beget Injustice

On Congress, and on the legislature of every state which levies an income tax, now rests a grave duty.

Each should pass laws which will guarantee that injustice shall not proceed from the new decision of the U.S. Supreme Court permitting states to tax incomes of federal employes, and the federal government to tax salaries of state employes.

For, immediately the court reversed its long-time course supporting mutual immunity from such taxes, every person affected became theoretically liable for past taxes. That is a federal employe who paid no state income tax in 1934, because the courts then ruled that he did not have to, now becomes liable for that same 1934 tax because the court now holds that he owed it.

It is easy to see how grave injustices might proceed from strict enforcement of any such procedure. To go back as far as 12 years in some cases, and say that a citizen must pay now, today, taxes for all those years when highest authority ruled he did not owe them, would be thoroughly unjust.

The Constitution provides that no ex post facto law may be passed. That means a law may not be passed which today penalizes you for something you did yesterday but which was then quite legal. Yet it would seem that a court decision can have the same effect, making you liable today for something you did yesterday, even though the same court yesterday said you were not liable.

The remedy to prevent any such injustice seems to be for Congress promptly to pass a law exempting state employes from back taxation, and for such states as have income taxes to pass similar laws specifically exempting federal employes from similar back taxes.

General approval will probably meet the court's change of view. Good sense surely indicates that government employes, no less than the rest of us, ought to bear their share of maintaining the government. And few will share the old objection that allowing states to taxe employes of federal government agencies, and reverse, is striking at those governments themselves.

The decision is right and long-needed. But it ought not to be allowed to become all instrument of oppression in its first application.

To penalize a man today for an act which, when he did it yesterday, was perfectly right and legal, is atrocious, and both federal and state governments owe a duty to heaed off any such unfortunate results of an otherwise sane decision.

Youth Should Be Especially on Watch for Tuberculosis

Tuberculosis, once captain of the men of death, has now been superseded by several other leading causes, yet it still remains the greatest killer of youth.

The germs that cause tuberculosis frequently get into the body without the slightest notion on the part of the persons concerned that he has even been exposed. The vast majority of tuberculosis (particularly in childhood) is spread to the children from adults who have the disease.

In the early stages of tuberculosis there are few of the symptoms about which most people know. Severe cough, spitting of blood, constant pain in the chest and profuse sweating at night are signs of a profound and severe infection and do not appear in the early stages of the disease.

However, the feeling of always being tired, and persistent loss of weight, a lack of appetite, and cough or a cold that hangs on and on, are symptoms which mean that there is something seriously wrong, which might be tuberculosis. These signs are a warning of the need of an immediate examination.

The reason for going to the doctor for an immediate examination rests in the ability of the physician by the use of the X-ray and the tuberculin test to find tuberculosis early. It has been said that "early tuberculosis can often be seen with the eye of the X-ray before it can be heard by the ear of the physician."

The tuberculin test is a harmless, safe skin test which indicates whether or not a person has been subjected to infection. The physician merely makes a scratch on the skin into which he puts a very small amount of a special material. If the test is positive, a red spot appears, whereas if the test is negative, the skin heals promptly.

College boys and girls can get tuberculin tests in most instances merely by inquiring at the health department of the school.

In the case of other children where there is the slightest possible question of the presence of this disease, mothers should see that the family doctor is given opportunity to make a tuberculin test and to have an X-ray picture of the chest if that seems desirable. Every child who has a positive tuberculin test should have an X-ray picture of the chest.

The one group in the popuntion most frequently infected with tuberculosis is the group of young girls between 15 and 30. These particularly must be watched for the earliest possible signs of this disease.

Hays Defends Democracy

It is high time that someone undertook to state the full case for democracy in these days of vaunted ideologies. Arthur Garfield Hays has done just that in "Democracy Works" (Random House: $3) and the result is a book that ought to be required reading for every American.

It ought to be required reading because it demonstrates that we don't need either the revolutionary right or the left to preserve both security and liberty in America; that within the framework of our existing institutions there is instead ample flexibility to meet the demands of a changing world. Finally, it ought to be read if for no other reason than to awaken a realization of just how well we are off today in contrast with the totalitarian states.

The record Hays sets forth for democracy in this connection is striking; higher standard of living, free play for thought and life, greater education, more leisure, civil rights. Thus democracy gives, as he says, a sense of power and dignity to the individual which makes the whole people responsible for their destiny.

That is something you can't say, of course, for the dictatorships. Democracies have capacities, says Hays, which authoritarian states can never encompass. They are bound by no rules except to be responsive to what the people want. Therein lies their safety valve.

Hays is not blind, however, to difficulties in the democratic state. But he sees democracy from the long term viewpoint. He is confident that in the light of 150 years progress under democratic government America is getting constantly closer to its goal, so close in fact that certainly there is no call to other forms.

Whether you will go all the way with Hays in this conclusion, you must admit he has written a profoundly stimulating book. Nor is there one more timely, vital now.—P. G. F.

Friends Old and New

Make new friends, but keep the old,—
Those are silver, these are gold;
New-made friendships, like new wine,
Age will mellow and refine.

Friendships that have stood the test—
Time and change—are surely best;
Brow may wrinkle, hair grow gray,
Friendship never knows decay.

For 'mid old friends, tried and true,
Once more we our youth renew;
But old friends, alas, may die,
New friends must their place supply.

Cherish Friendship in your breast;
New is good, but old is best;
Make new friends, but know the old—
Those are silver, these are gold.

Newspapers Given Chesterfield Ads

New Campaign for April and May Released by Company

Continuation of the 1939 newspaper advertising for Chesterfield cigarettes, just released by Liggett & Myers Tobacco company for national newspapers during April and May, features more famous personalities in Chesterfield's drive to emphasize more smoking pleasure through the right combination of the world's finest cigarette tobaccos.

The Chesterfield theme is supported by such well-known screen, radio and sport stars as Bette Davis, Paul Whiteman, Errol Flynn, Olivia DeHavilland, Howard Hill, Big Bill Lee and others.

In addition to the newspapers, Chesterfield's magazine and display advertising continues to point out that Chesterfield's famous can't-be-copied blend gives smokers what they want and that every day more and more smokers are finding real mildness and better taste in the cigarette that satisfies.

In addition to this regular advertising Chesterfield continues its coast-to-coast radio broadcasts featuring Paul Whiteman, Joan Edwards, the Modernaries and Clark Dennis on Wednesday nights and Burns and Allen, Frank Parker, Ray Noble and his orchestra on Friday nights.

• STORIES IN STAMPS

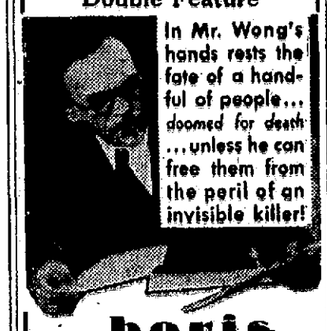

Albert National Park—"Lost World" of Africa

STRETCHING from the crystal waters of Lake Kivu north across the Equator toward Lake Albert, Albert National Park is an unending wonderland, a "lost world" deep in the heart of the Belgian Congo.

Its vast expanse of 3308 square miles includes both lush jungle and snow-covered volcanoes. Through its forests roam both the newly-discovered okapi and the world's most famous animals. In the park are 600 specimens of the big mountain gorilla alone, every kind of chimpanzee and baboon, buffaloes, hippopotami, elephants, 8000 antelopes and rare birds not yet all named.

So the park is a great outdoor laboratory attracting scientific expeditions from many parts of the world. It is the first national park in Africa and one of the first set aside for truly scientific purposes. To keep the animals untamed, a part of the park's area has been designated as a wildlife retreat in which even scientists are not allowed.

Its altitude runs a range from 2500 to 14,000 feet above sea level. From 9000 to 12,000 feet, the mountain gorillas live in forests of gigantic trees hung with moss, ferns and orchids. This is the country that the late Carl Akeley called the most beautiful in all Africa. A park scene is shown here on a current stamp of the Belgian Congo, one of six values.

THEATERS

Charles Winninger and Deanna Durbin, reunited in Deanna's first "grown-up" motion picture story, Universal's "Three Smart Girls Grow Up." At the Saenger Monday and Tuesday.

At the Saenger

Deanna Durbin has done it again.

In her fifth consecutive success, this 16-year-old singing star has bettered her former efforts. The record that seemed incredible has been accomplished.

When Deanna made "Three Smart Girls" some two and a half years ago, she came as a surprise star, a new entry in the Hollywood firmament. Her picture created a lot of discussion, the burden of which was that it was a fluke, and that she could not repeat.

Then she made "100 Men and a Girl," and lo and behold, it was acclaimed greater than "Three Smart Girls." And "Mad About Music," her third, was hailed with approval and the acclamation that she had surpassed her previous efforts.

Repeats Success

And then came "That Certain Age," and fans declared it was better than the others, but shook their heads. "She can't keep up like this," they said.

But now comes "Three Smart Girls Grown Up," he fifth Universal picture. This picture showing at the Saenger Monday and Tuesday, matinee Tuesday at 2:15.

All there is to say is that it is superior to the others. We wonder if her sixth picture will surpass her fifth, the seventh the sixth, and so on into the dim and distant future.

Deanna sings four songs in "Three Smart Girls Grow Up," beautiful, well chosen numbers, semi-classics. They are "The Last Rose of Summer," from Flotow's opera "Martha;" "La Capinera," by Sir Julius Benedict; "Invitation to the Dance," by Weber, with Charles Henderson's special vocal arrangement; and "Because," by Edward Teschemacher and Guy D'Hardelot.

But it is not her singing alone that makes Meanna's pictures screen events of the season. Without singing a song she would probably be voted one of the most popular actresses of the screen.

The story, by Bruce Manning and Felix Jackson, differs from the original "Three Smart Girls." Deanna is seen as Penny Craig, who attempts to unsnarl the tangled love affairs of her two older sisters, with results both amusing and amazing.

Henry Koster, who piloted Deanna in the original "Three Smart Girls" and "100 Men and a Girl," directed the present picture. He has injected a wealth of detail and characterization, glowing personalities, speed of development and comedy into the offering.

At the New

Second in Monogram's series of detective stories, "The Mystery of Mr. Wong," which opens Tuesday and Wednesday at the New theater, is an eerie thriller, continuing the exploits of the celestial sleuth, James Lee Wong, otherwise known as Boris Karloff.

"The Mystery of Mr. Wong" even surpasses the introductory picture, "Mr. Wong, Detective," in suspense and chilling action. The story of a fatal jewel, and of the three people who met violent deaths because of its curse, "The Mystery of Mr. Wong" is somberly played against an eerie, supernatural background.

Brandon Edwards dies on the very night he brings the "Eye of the Daughter of the Moon" to America; and his household, smoldering in bitter hatred and greed, shelters two more who are murdered. Then James Lee Wong, a house guest at the time, unearths some startling clues, and unmasks the real killer, who is protected by the curse on the fatal star sapphire.

Boris Karloff, deserting his "horror" roles, is again excellent as the Oxford educated Chinese; and Grant Withers, playing Captain Street, emphasizes the fact that police captains are usually intelligent, and not the typical movie "stooge" detective.

Dorothy Tree plays the unhappy wife of Brandson Edwards with poise and intelligence and an effective quiet hysteria when the scene demands such emotion.

Outstanding in other parts are Lotus Long as a villanious house maid; Ivan Lebedoff, who plays a sinister singer; and Holmes Herbert, the old family friend with an unhappy secret.

Also on this double gill you will see Smith Ballow in "Hawaiian Buckaroo" with Evelyn Knapp and a well known cast of western stars.

Every time the Nazis have taken new countries, they have also taken new enemies.—Prince Hubertus zu Loewenstein, exiled German Catholic.

Dean Pitches Well in First Appearance

SAN ANTONIO, Texas—(AP)—Dizzy Dean made his first appearance of the season on the mound Sunday, pitching two innings as the Chicago Cubs walloped the St. Louis Browns, 13 to 4, to even their series at one each. Although not performing as the Dean of 1934, the big fellow made a favorable impression and the two runs scored on him were unearned. He allowed three hits.

Diz appeared to have good curves and occasionally turned loose a fast ball. He was unsteady, issuing two passes when he first took the hill in the fifth inning. Hank Leiber hit a homer for the Cubs with the bases loaded in the second. Carl Reynolds, Steve Mesner and Mel Mazzera also hit for the circuit.

After Napoleon was beaten, the Congress of Vienna set up a small state known as the Congress Kingdom in central Poland.

But the Polish national spirit lived on despite an existence as minority peoples ruled by Germany, Austria and Russia. The World war gave them their opportunity to build a new Polish state, the one around which European opposing forces are now gathering for a possible new struggle.

Bowling

Byron Evans, president of the Hope bowling league, announced a called meeting of all managers of bowling teams to meet with him at 7 o'clock Monday night at the recreational center, Fair Park.

Mr. Evans said several problems had arisen since formation of the bowling league and he asked that all managers be present in an effort to iron out the difficulties.

One of the problems to be discussed, he said, is a more efficient manner in keeping scores of various teams.

to help establish Italian rule. It was reported the ambassador refrained from suggesting that occupation of Albania violated the British-Italian friendship accord but had expressed his government's desire for full information on the situation because of its effect in the Mediterraneaen status quo.

Ciano was believed to have assured Perth that Italy had no intention of harming British interests in the Mediterraneaen or of violating the British-Italian accord.

Mussolini's own newspaper Il Popolo d'Italia of Milan, said "there has been no violation of English interests" and that the British-Italian accord was not violated since "Rome has no intention of making use of what happened to compromise such interests."

This was considered an attempt to dispel fears Italian troops in Albania might be used for further expansion, such as seizure of the Greek island of Corfu, south of the Albanian frontier.

On Love's Highway With Motor Heir?

Sen. Jim Lewis of Illinois Dies at 72

Great Politician and Dandy Succumbs to Sudden Heart Attack

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Senator James Hamilton Lewis, 72, of Illinois died Sunday night in Garfield hospital of a heart ailment, six hours after returning by train from Chicago, his home. He became ill aboard the train and was taken by ambulance to the hospital. Death occurred at 8:25 p. m.

Mrs. Rose Douglas Lewis, wife of the senator, a Democrat and staunch supporter of President Roosevelt, was with him when he died.

Lewis was known throughout the nation for his Chesterfieldian manners.

Dr. Francis R. Hagner, a Washington physician was waiting at the station and attended the senator. The doctor said death was due to coronary thrombosis.

Edwin A. Halsey, secretary of the senate, said the senate probably would adjourn at once after convening Monday.

Lewis was the Democratic whip of the senate, whose major duty it was to hold the party's voting strength readily available during floor ballot tests. In that capacity, he followed with few departures the leadership of the Roosevelt administration. His most outstanding difference with the administration came over Mr. Roosevelt's efforts to procure senate ratification of the St. Lawrence seaway pact with Canada. That, Lewis opposed vigorously.

For a time he was a teacher, then a stevedore, lawyer, congressman, soldier, diplomat and senator—but always Lewis was the perfect gentleman. His courtly manners were known from the water front of Seattle, where he labored in young manhood, to the senate halls of Washington and the capitols of Europe where his striking career took him.

Perfectly tailored suits, harmonizing shirts, ties, socks and handkerchiefs, a rakisly tipped hat, spotless gloves, beribboned eyelashes and a carefully parted beard that was astonishingly pink until creeping age grayed it, made up a personal ensemble that almost obscured the man's abilities.

Early in his congressional career Champ Clark of Missouri dubbed him "the greatest dude in the United States." Speaker Tom B. (Czar) Reed called him "the garfulous rainbow."

But men who knew him best said he was a master politician. Court verdicts testified to his effective pleadings at the bar. Votes reflected the power of his oratory. Citations of his legal and historical works evidenced his acumen.

He had the distinction of having represented two states in the national legislature. He was a congressman-at-large from Washington 1897-99 and senator from Illinois 1913-19 and 1931-43. He was the first senate whip, having been named to that post by the Democratic majority early in his first term in the upper house.

Campaign Against

may take years to restore an advanced case of tuberculosis to health.

"Cure is costly and often impossible. The sick person may remain a lasting burden on the community, whereas, the early case usually is asily cured in a short time at a small cost. The chances of recovery are excellent, if an early diagnosis is made.

"Statistics show that in 1937 there were 18 deaths in Hempstead county caused from the disease. At that time there were 162 active cases," Miss Feild continued.

As part of the county-wide educational campaign, Miss Feild has appointed various committees in which she urges the members to stress the importance of the early diagnosis campaign.

Much literature is being distributing this week throughout the schools of the country. Talks are to be made by physicians, faculty members of schools, and other persons.

Jimmy H. Jones, principal of Hope High School, touched upon the importance of the work last Friday in a talk before Hope Rotary club. Dr. G. E. Cannon is to address the P. T. A. council at 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon in the interest of the Early Diagnosis Campaign.

The Hope library is distributing phamplets with each rented book. The phamplets tell of tuberculosis campaign. Miss Feild is also employing other means of an attack upon the disease. Her committees are as follows:

Publicity Committee—Leonard Ellis, chairman, W. H. Etter, F. C. Hawkins, Van Hayes, Hattie Anne Feild.

Poster and distribution—J. K. Sale, chairman, Mrs. J. C. Broyles, Mrs. J. A. Henry, Jimmie Jones.

Theater publicity—Mrs. L. M. Life, chairman, R. V. McGinnis, Remmel Young.

Rev. L. O. Leet in Revival Services

Texarkana Pastor Conducting Program at Christian Church

The Rev. L. O. Leet, pastor of Central Christian church, of Texarkana, who spoke at the opening service of a two-week's revival meeting at the Christian Church in Hope Sunday night, plased an audience which filled the church auditorium.

The Rev. Mr. Leet's subject Sunday night was, "What Does It Mean To Be a Christian?" His portrayal of the present-day church member, as contrasted with a real Christian, was a sharp picture. He said that the major part of any present-day preacher's time must be spent in efforts to make Christians out of folks who are already counted as members of the church.

A special musical feature of Sunday night's program was a vocal solo by Mrs. C. J. Rogers, of Texarkana, who sang "Ivory Palaces." Mrs. Rogers was formerly a member of the Hope Christian church and her many friends here expressed appreciation for her solo and her presence in the worship service.

The subject announced for Monday's night services, which begins at 7:30, is "What Is Man?" Rev. Leet brings to the pulpit years of college work and a breath of general knowledge and experience as a minister and evangelist, and approached his subjects from a very practical and most modern angle.

The Rev. Millard Baggett, who is to lead the musical program during the meeting, will arrive from his home in Bentonville, Ark., Monday afternoon, and will have a part in Monday night's program. He has a pleasing personality and a splendid voice, which, coupled with a rare ability to get other folks to sing, will make him a very important part of the revival campaign.

The entire membership of the Christian church join with the pastor in an invitation to the church-going people of Hope to attend the services each night at 7:30.

Myth of the Easter Bunny Too Gentle to Harm Child.

"Is the Easter Bunny going to bring me a basket?" asked Betty.

"Why, of course, darling," replied Mother. "He will bring it in the night when you are asleep and hide it somewhere for you to hunt."

"Will it have eggs?"

"Yes, indeed. You and I will color some hard-boiled eggs and put them where the bunny can get them. Besides, he usually brings some big candy eggs and a chocolate rabbit or maybe a chicken."

"Why on earth do you fill the child up with all that junk?" demanded Aunt Mary, hearing the last part of the conversation. "There is no Easter Bunny, kid."

"There is so. I saw his picture in the paper and Mummy says there is. He brings things to children. He is our friend."

"All right, then, have it your way. I'm going to look under my bed and see if he brings me a new hat."

When Betty had gone, her mother said, "I don't think it hurts anything to let the little soul believe there is some kind of magic left. Children love anything out of the ordinary. Mysteries and unexplainable things and all that. You and I adored Easter when were were youngsters. It didn't hurt us."

"It hurt me. I learned to think you got things for nothing. But listen, you'd better not let Aunt Abby hear you telling her grand-niece that there is an Easter fairy. She thinks it wicked to mix a religious holiday with a festival."

"I know. It bothers me too. But I look at it this way. Children small enough to get a little pleasure from thinking there is a magic rabbit, don't understand the complete sacredness of the day. Besides, Easter is supposed to be a time for happiness. The days of gloominess, in nearly all church rituals, are over.

"People get new clothes and send each other presents and take trips. A kind of new hope is in the air. It is a beginning and not an ending."

"All right," said Aunt Mary. "Get Betty a nice basket. Wait, I saw one today. Leave it to me. By the way, I promised Aunt Abby to go with her to the sunrise service. I think it would be inspiring."

"Yes, but I would not dare to tell Aunt Abby, though, that I was just reading that the sunrise service was part of the old sunworshippers' religion. It came around the spring equinox, and that's why. But, you see, things are really so confusing, I think we just have to do the best we can."

● SERIAL STORY

BORDER ADVENTURE

BY OREN ARNOLD

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday: Betty admits to herself that she is more than interested in the two Border Patrol officers. Meanwhile, they are looking for Barro and in distant Mexico aliens are being smuggled up to the border.

CHAPTER IV

"WE'D better stake out the horses over here and make the rest of the way on foot," Sheridan Starr suggested. "If we top the next rise on horseback we could be seen."

"Right," agreed Hope Kildare. "And make a fine rifle target."

"Yeamp."

The two young officers made their mounts secure with ropes tied in a clump of scrubby desert trees. There would be a few mouthfuls to browse there as well as concealment in daytime, the men knew.

Each man then hooked a quart canteen of water to his belt, and a rolled blanket containing a little food was strapped military fashion to each back. Cartridge belts were already filled, pistols strapped on. Each removed a rifle from a saddle holster and the two set out afoot, moving almost silently in the darkness. The night had only stars for guidance, and the threatening black bulk of the mountains.

"San Felipe Canyon properly begins six miles further up, where the new paved highway skirts the mouth of it," Hope remarked, barely above a whisper now.

"That's why aliens are beginning to use it. They can make it up the canyon at night to the highway, be picked up in cars and be well on the way to Albuquerque or Denver or some other inland point by daybreak. See?"

"Sure. But it leads right on down to the fence too, doesn't it?"

"Yeamp. And there's where we better wait. If we don't nab 'em soon as they cross the line they may take a notion to scatter."

"Okay. How many you guess'll be in the party, Sherry?"

"No tellin'. Betty Mary didn't have the whole dope on it."

They ceased talking and began moving now with the skill of long practice, slowly, silently, as an Indian might go. Beyond the horizon line dead ahead was San Felipe Canyon.

IT was a small gorge, but its 300 feet or so of depth loomed forbidding by night. Parts of its walls were sheer; a man could step over a rim and plunge to sure death below. All of it was a rocky rugged terrain, touched here and there by thorny cacti which had to be sensed by the crawling men.

"Don't stick up your head," Hope warned his friend, unnecessarily, whispering right into his ear. "Hump your blanket up around your neck. It'll keep your silhouette from looking like a man, in case anybody should just happen to be gazing at the skyline."

"Right," Sheridan whispered.

They moved on all fours—putting first their rifles forward, then pulling up legs. If they had been older men they would have realized that this was much like reconnoitering into No Man's Land in 1917, and indeed that's about what it was anyway. They had excellent reason to suspect that five or maybe 25 desperate aliens might be on the other side of this ridge, and they knew any such aliens would train hawk-like eyes for the officers from El Paso.

"Worst thing is," Hope whispered once, "we didn't get the tip in time. We may be already too late."

His concern over this heightened as more time passed. The two men edged over the rim, hearing nothing but a distant night bird, and worked their way down near the narrow floor of the canyon. They found a rock about the size of an automobile which could serve double purpose—it shielded them from the chill night breeze which raced up the canyon, and it would be a breastworks from possible bullets too. They huddled beside it for a long half hour, listening intently.

"If anybody's in this canyon now," Sherry whispered at last, "They darn sure aren't moving. The walls are so close we'd surely have heard some sort of little noise or echo."

"Right," agreed Hope. "But they may come yet. If we aren't too late getting here."

"I'm afraid we are. What time is it, say?"

"It's past 2," Hope answered, studying the stars. He had a watch with luminous dial and a pocket flashlight too, but dared not use either now, of course.

FROM their position they could be fairly comfortable and could surely discover any pedestrians or riders who might try to come up the canyon. They unrolled blankets and wrapped up to combat the cold. Then they took turns on guard.

The long night vigil was never interrupted. Not a single untoward sound disturbed the officers. At 7 o'clock they ate a bit of cold food and at 8 a. m. they crawled down—their khaki uniforms made a natural camouflage from spies with field glasses, so long as they moved cautiously—and inspected the canyon floor. Twice they searched, carefully covering a wide area.

"Maybe we weren't too late, but too early," Sherry said when they had met again. "Not a sign of a track, either horse's or man's."

"Me either," Hope nodded. "What'll we do, stick it out?"

"Guess so."

They were putting themselves in for a long, tedious task and they knew it; but patience is truly golden if you are a border guard. They settled down behind their rock and brush to wait until night should fall again—12 long hours, and then more vigil at night.

They passed the time talking, as only friends can. A lot of it was business, and a very great deal of it was about Betty Mary Jordan and her unexpected appearance in their lives, but they did not allow the talk about her to get personal. Not a thing was said, all day, about the fact that Sheridan Starr already had asked her for a first date. Both men sensed that such talk might lead them to dangerous ground.

Never for a moment did they imagine that she hadn't given them an accurate tip. They knew Mexican character, knew that Barro might have planned to send aliens over last night and then decide to postpone the crossing. They might have to wait several nights, sending one man back to care for the horses and to bring additional provisions for themselves. Barro, and all Latins, are like that; unhurried, changeable. Sheridan and Hope had kept patient vigil before, were not unhappy now, especially with thoughts of Betty Mary to entertain them.

They lay low and slept some, one at a time, during the day, but at sundown both were alert and on guard again. The second night was much like the first; lighted only by stars, silent and clear and rather cold. From 7 to 9 o'clock the two men scarcely whispered. At 10, Hope whispered, "Needn't expect anything before midnight," —and almost instantly corrected that opinion.

Somewhere in the canyon, at that moment, a rock went tumbling! A large, bounding pebble, nearby.

Grasping his arm for silence, Hope felt Sheridan Starr's big muscles go tense beside him.
